

WHY DO THIS COURSE?

This course analyses factors impacting on suburban search success and the usefulness of particular search methods in differing suburban situations. It deals with the behaviour patterns of common suburban search subjects, applies the missing person matrix to suburban environments and explores the utilisation of tracking skills in suburban settings.

Unique aspects of suburban searches, such as legal constraints, private and commercial property considerations and dealing with non-searchers are also addressed. This course is recommended for all SAR personnel that may participate in SAR operations in suburban type environments.

COURSE OBJECTIVES

The overall objective is to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of suburban searching.

By the end of this course you should be able to;

- Adapt your wilderness search skills to searching in suburban environments
- Apply Lost Person Behaviour to suburban searching
- Developed an understanding of the logistical factors impinging on search success in a suburban environment.

Completing this course can be accredited towards a SAR qualification which is currently under review to better meet the needs of the SAR community.
